Revolution Which Has Shaken Sultan's Domain Has Entered Into the Cloistered Vaults; New Freedom.

Turkish women have been affected simest as much as the men by the changes that have been taking place in their country. They are showing surprising alacrity in availing them-selves of the opportunities found in new conditions.

One of the most interesting and re-markable events in the revolt of the Young Turks in 1998 was the attitude of the women. Being immune from messages and documents and traveled to and fro on missions of great se-crecy and importance.

Finaling on a pile of papers, Ben it was stated that during the revolu-Weith, a launch hand, and a chilly fide on the Oakland estuary at eight with servants and did the housework themselves in order to parry spies.

gles for a wider life, and have been endeavoring to push them back into the seclusion of the harem. It has been found impossible to do this altogether.

Turkish women are often well educated, though it is only within the last fifty years that it has become customary for them to read and write. Their lives of seclusion encourage study, and they pass the long winter evenings in devouring any literature that comes their way, for many are excellent linguists. For many years past the education of the upper classes has been conducted on modern lines, which has had the effect of increasing their discontent, and they are intensely environs of their Christian and Jewlish sisters.

It is generally understood that there must be a number of readings taken to determine a volumeter, and as the current required the control of the survey part, and should you wait, nursing between his traces.

It is not generally known that the Turkish, woman is in a better legal position than her sisters in any country in Edrope. She is economically independent of her husband, and the law obliges him to endow her at marriage with a separate estate over which he has no control. She has the disposal of any money or posses-sions that may have been hers before her merriage, and as in Turkey daughters inherit from parents equalwith sons, this is often consti as she pleases. She can sue her hus-band in the courts and he sued by keeping expenses, and no one has a right to inquire how it is speet, while her husband is obliged to maintain her and her servants according to his means. The case recently brought before an English magistrate of a man who had given his wife six cents a day for herself and two children for nine years would be impossible in

In fact, the rights and pretensions of the Turkish woman are so power-ful that though men are allowed four-wives by law they rarely are found with more than one, chief among the reasons given being that they do not care to put themselves in the power of more than one woman.

It must not be supposed, however, that Turkish women do not suffer under many and great disabilities. It takes the sworn evidence of two women to balance that of one man, and whereas men are permitted to marry those of another faith the women are torbidden to do so. It was recently forbidden to do so. It was recently announced in English and American papers that a law had been passed by the Turkish parliament by which a woman could claim divorce from her husband for unfatthfulness.

Had this been true it would have been a great and far reaching reform. The statement, however, is incorrect. All a woman can do under the circumstances is to put the matter before a court of jurisdiction, which can avant her a separation, should it be considered desirable. The Turkish parliament could not pass such a law. The number of women who are joining the movement for the greater freedom of their see is increasing, and it now includes many highly influential isdies. For the first time in the history of the country the sullan recently received a deputation of Turkish women led by the wife of Tewfik Pasha, the leader of the Young Tork party, and sister of Ahuet Risa, the postdent of the Turkish parliament.

They complained that the leaders of the women's movement wore being persoculed and they saked for the suspension of the edical abolishing women's clubs. The sall-

The secretary of agriculture concluded that the most effective way to use the mency available would be by requiring as a preliminary to entering into an agreement with any state for co-operative fire protection, that the state authorities should submit a definite plan showing in detail exactly what it was proposed to do. With these plans were required maps showing areas to which protection would be given. All plans submitted are carefully examined by the department of agriculture to see both that the area to be protected is actually forested land on the headwaters of savigable streams and that the plan of protection proposed in well conceived and thoroughly practical, with an organized and effective system of administration by capable state officers.
